Utah Rivers Council is looking for two energetic, organized individuals to help conduct outreach work for our WaterRoots Campaign to protect some of the West's most important aquatic ecosystems. WaterRoots is a grassroots campaign to solve the root problems facing our aquatic ecosystems by leading Utah into a more sustainable water future.

WaterRoots Coordinators work to ensure this campaign is successful by helping to engage and educate the public through events, presentations, and via our water conservation programming. Utah Rivers Council is the statewide advocacy leader in water policy, water conservation and river protection. We are looking for two fun, independent individuals to join our hard working staff of advocates who enjoy our work and Utah's amazing outdoor landscapes.

Our WaterRoots Campaign educates Utahns about their water use and how it impacts Utah's rivers and lakes and the array of wildlife that depend upon these aquatic ecosystems. The campaign provides real tools for water conservation success from the individual to the agency level and engages community leaders in solving Utah's water problems on the local level.

The ideal candidates have a personable communication style, good writing skills, computer skills, are well organized and have a serious work ethic. Other skills desired include an understanding of current environmental problems and/or water policy, persuasive writing and event logistics. This is an excellent entry-level position for those seeking to get into nonprofit environmental work.
